CUCARACHA CHA CHA

"I wish I could have gone with Sniffles to the dance festival our little garden friends are having today, but I have to study my history lesson," Mary Jane sighed. "Oh dear, I wonder if I'll ever understand the customs of our neighbors in Mexico."

She had just started to read her book when Sniffles interrupted her.

"Mary Jane, come quickly," he called. "On my way to the dance festival I heard someone crying. Hurry! Make yourself small and come with me," he pleaded.

Forgetting her history lesson, Mary Jane jumped to her feet, closed her eyes, and recited: "Magic words of Poof, Poof, Piffles; make me just as small as Sniffles."

Her wish was instantly granted, and she hurried with Sniffles back to the garden.

"There," Sniffles cried, pointing to a small figure hidden among the cactus.

"Why, it's a little lady roach," Mary Jane exclaimed, as she and Sniffles picked their way through the thorny plants.

"Please don't call me that . . . my name ees Cucaracha," the small creature sobbed.

"Why are you crying, Cucaracha?" Mary Jane asked in soft comforting tones.

"I am here from Mexico for a veesit," Cucaracha sighed, "but I am so homeseeck that I hid here een the cactus. Eet reminds me of home. I have tried to make friends here, but no one understands me . . . I theenk thees ees a very unfriendly country."

"Oh, Cucaracha, I am so sorry you think that. I am Mary Jane, and this is Sniffles. We would like to be your friends," Mary Jane said, sitting down beside the lonely little lady. "You know, I was just reading about Mexico in my history book. Would you tell us something about your home?"

"Een my country," Cucaracha began, "I was always happy and gay . . . Many friends I had, and I would sing, and dance the Cha Cha, and go to fiestas all the time."

"I have an idea!" Mary Jane exclaimed. "Sniffles and I are going to a dance festival . . . that's almost the same thing as a fiesta, Cucaracha. Please come with us," Mary Jane asked, not waiting for an answer but leading the way out of the cactus.

"What's your idea?" Sniffles asked.

"I'm going to ask her to dance for us. You will dance, won't you Cucaracha?" Mary Jane eagerly extended the invitation.

Very soon, they arrived at a gaily decorated spot in the garden where the dance festival was beginning.

"Hi, everybody!" Mary Jane greeted the little garden people. "I want you to meet my friend. She has come all the way from Mexico, and she is going to dance for us. Everybody, say hello to Cucaracha."

Cucaracha began to dance. Soon everyone was tapping their feet to the gay Latin music. She danced on and on, demonstrating her speciality, the cha cha.

"Golly, Mary Jane, she is terrific," the crowd exclaimed. "Maybe she would teach us to dance like that."

"That was my real idea," Mary Jane winked at Sniffles. "By the time she has taught the cha cha to the others she will have more friends than she can count, and she will love our country."

Mary Jane was right, and soon everyone was dancing the Cucaracha Cha Cha.

"What a wonderful festival," Mary Jane exclaimed, as she stopped dancing to catch her breath. "And, best of all, it has helped me understand our neighbors in Mexico."
